Logistics and Transportation certification frequently asked questions.

1. Are AST&L Certification Exam still being offered?
   - The Global Logistics Associate (GLA) exam will continue to be offered.
   - Effective December 18, 2015 the Certified in Transportation and Logistics (CTL) and the Professional Designation in Logistics and Supply Chain Management (PLS) certification exam will no longer be administered.

2. Will AST&L Certifications continue to be recognized?
   - Any AST&L Certification in good standing will continue to be recognized and searchable in the APICS Credential Verification System.

3. Are there any changes to the blanket waiver process for CTL or PLS?
   - The CTL and PLS blanket waiver process is being phased out. However, any candidate enrolled in an approved school program as of September 1, 2015 may qualify. Once you have met the qualifications for the blanket waiver, you may apply for your waiver through the APICS website at apics.org/logistics.

4. What is the new APICS process for pursuing a certification?
   - Information on the logistics and transportation certifications is located on the APICS website at apics.org/logistics.
5. Does AST&L or APICS own my certification?

- Candidates own their credential status and are responsible for ensuring their credential is maintained in good standing. APICS is the credentialing body that develops and delivers the industry-recognized certification program and awards the certificate.

6. Why am I not eligible for APICS Student Membership after I graduate. I was told that I have up to 6 months after graduation to apply for Student Membership – APICS states that I'm not eligible?

- The eligibility requirement for Student Membership at APICS requires that individuals must be enrolled as a fulltime student. There is a Young Professional membership for only $99 for individuals who have graduated and are just starting their career. The requirements and benefits are listed on the APICS website at apics.org/membership.
